UPDATE

The month of March closed almost at breakeven with a slight profit of 0,18%.

The markets remain very volatile due to the current international situation that is still uncertain and cause market movements

FORECAST

The US equity market (S&P 500) rallied from the recent lows in March and there is still bullish sentiment.

This is a confirmation that we are still in a bull market and the recent drop was just a correction.

Statistically, April has been a positive month for equities, in the past, but it's not guaranteed.

A small pullback is very likely and if that is followed by a price consolidation above the 200 moving average, we could see new all-time highs in the stock market in April or May.

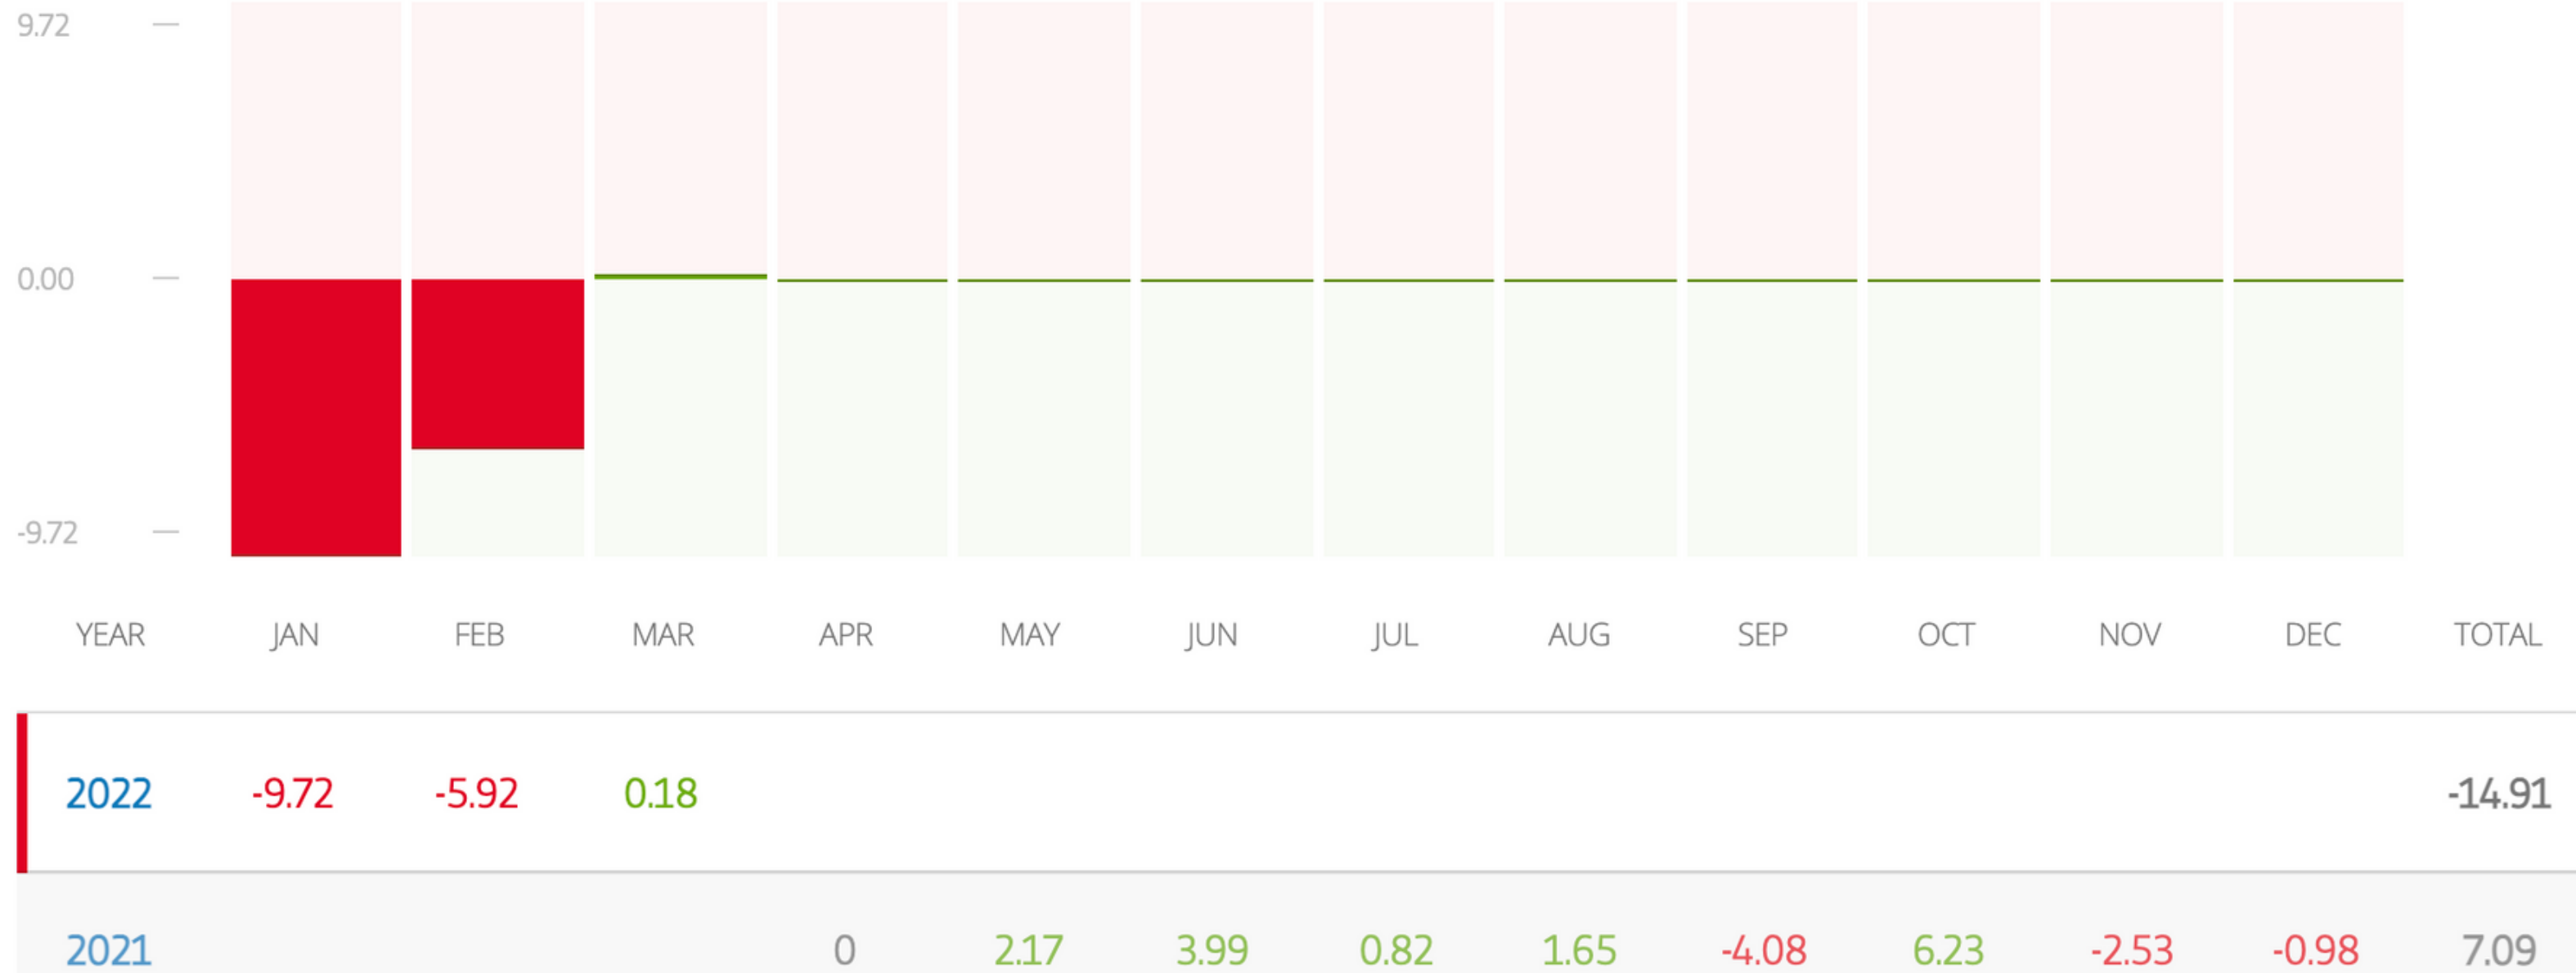

Bonds, instead, are currently oversold and are starting to roll back up, that's why I have added some bond positions to my portfolio, also to diversify and hedge against a potential drop in the upcoming months.
